

Blog

No more fooling with reading glasses for this busy new business owner

Posted by Jenna Farr | Tuesday April 4, 2017

Catching and keeping up with Amanda Turner is not always easy. She and her husband, Pastor Eddie, serve their congregation at the Family Worship Center in Murfreesboro, Tennessee. Amanda is the large and busy church's bookkeeper and executive assistant, making sure the ministry's many weekly services, prayer groups, and events are meeting the needs of their members. When she is not at the worship center, Amanda can be found alongside her daughter, Cayce, at Lizard Thicket, the women's clothing boutique filled with fun and fashionable styles they recently launched. As a wife, mom and grandmother, she seems to be in constant motion.

(https://i1.wp.com/kamra.com/wp-content/uploads/2017/04/The-

Turner-Gang.jpg?ssl=1)

There was one issue that slowed down Amanda, her reading vision. In her mid-forties, she started to realize it was getting hard to read. "I had perfect distance vision, but I couldn't read an excel sheet, a calendar or even a message on my phone without reaching for my glasses," Amanda explained.

Because of presbyopia, her reading vision kept getting worse and worse as Amanda entered her 50s. She wasn't alone; the natural aging eye condition affects more than 114 million people in the US. It starts around the age of 45 when the lens of the eye slowly becomes less and less flexible making focusing on near objects, like a phone screen or a magazine, difficult.

For years, Amanda had to make sure at least one pair of her ever-increasing collection of reading glasses was always close by her side. "It was frustrating because I couldn't see things up close, but then I had to take my glasses off to drive, see someone across the room or simply watch a movie," Amanda said.

(https://i2.wp.com/kamra.com/wp-content/uploads/2017/04/Amanda-Turner-and-Cayce-

Wallace-at-Lizard-Thicket-Murfreesboro-1.jpg?ssl=1) When Amanda heard that the KAMRA® corneal inlay was offered at the Wang Vision Institute in nearby Nashville, she picked up the phone to find out more. During her appointment, the staff told her how the KAMRA inlay would help her see well again. The tiny, mini ring would be surgically placed in her eye, and using the pinhole effect, would focus light for clearer reading vision. She scheduled her procedure soon after. "I was really shocked at how quick the procedure was," Amanda shared.

"Now, I don't fool with glasses at all," she explained. "Cayce and I will be at Lizard Thicket sorting through a new shipment of dresses and accessories, and I can read the tiniest print on the labels and tags or see the smallest details on a new blouse. If one of our youth pastors wants to go over activity schedules and spreadsheets at church, I don't have to run back to the office for my glasses. Life is just easier."

If you are like Amanda and frustrated having to slow down put on your reading glasses or contact lenses to do even the simplest everyday activities, now there is a solution. The KAMRA inlay could make reading easy again!

Check your suitability. (<https://kamra.com/kamra-inlay/check-your-suitability/>) See if the KAMRA Inlay might be right for you.

 (<https://kamra.com/posts/news/no-more-fooling-with-reading-glasses-for-this-busy-new-business-owner/?share=facebook&nb=1>) 52

 (<https://kamra.com/posts/news/no-more-fooling-with-reading-glasses-for-this-busy-new-business-owner/?share=twitter&nb=1>)

 (<https://kamra.com/posts/news/no-more-fooling-with-reading-glasses-for-this-busy-new-business-owner/?share=linkedin&nb=1>)